Crime prevention 'moving in right direction': Chief

Annual stats report. Crime levels down 14 per cent, thanks to focus on crime analysis, community policing, cops say

SHANE GIBSON
shane.gibson@metronews.ca

Police released their annual crime statistics report Tuesday, and the numbers show crime is down almost across the board in the city.

The force's 2013 report shows overall crime levels dropped 14 per cent over the 2012 numbers, violent crime dipped 13 per cent and property crime fell 17 per cent.

"From a crime-prevention perspective, we're definitely moving in the right direction," said WPS Chief Devon Clunis. "I know that we're just beginning to turn the corner on crime prevention, but I think we're achieving some momentum."

Supt. Gord Perrier credited much of the report's good news to a combination of the force's push toward crime prevention through social development and their increasing use of crime analysis to target hot spots of criminal activity.

"It's about doing a number of different things all together all together to try and attack different pockets of crime," he explained. "It's not just a rear-view look — it's got to be rear-view, it's got to be now, and it's got to be what is it tomorrow."

While the numbers were down in nearly all 21 categories of violent crimes — including an 18 per cent drop in the number of homicides over the last five-year average — rates were up in sexual assaults with a weapon (23 such assaults compared with 10 in 2012), and attempted murder, up 55 per cent with 17 last year compared with 11 in 2012.

By the numbers

- 96%: Clearance rate for homicides in 2013
- 40,718: Total number of criminal code offences in Winnipeg in 2013
- 185,837: Total calls for police service in 2013

Arizona not mayor's primary residence; report called mistake

Clarification. Katz suspects blame for error lies with land titles company of assessor's office, says spokeswoman

Mayor Sam Katz's primary residence continues to be in Winnipeg, his office stated on Tuesday in response to a media report that his home in Scottsdale, Ariz., was viewed as his primary residence in tax records.

Carmen Barnett, communications director for the mayor's office, said it would be impossible for Katz to declare his Scottsdale home as his primary residence because in order to do so, he'd have to spend six months plus a day there.

"We all know that's logistically impossible to make EPC," she said, referring to executive policy committee, which generally meets three Wednesdays a month from September to July.

"He's declaring all of that, and he's always been open — since he's owned properties down there before being mayor, he's always declared that Winnipeg is his home."

Barnett said Katz provided all of the accurate information to the land titles company and believes the error lies there or with the Maricopa County Assessor's Office, which includes the area where the mansion is located.

In Tuesday's edition of the Winnipeg Free Press, Robert Pizorno, communications director for the Maricopa County Assessor's Office, stated that they plan on sending Katz a notice to clarify his status and recover $600 in property tax credit given due to the home being listed in their files as a primary residence.

This isn't the first time Katz's Arizona home has made headlines. In 2012 it was revealed that he had bought the home from Teri Nordstrom, who is related to the Shindleman family of Shindico Realty.

At Fringe. Truth, Justice and the Vietnamese way

Metro Winnipeg and the CBC have partnered to bring you the best of the Winnipeg Fringe Festival. Here are three shows you should check out:

Executing Justice

The year is 2030 and Canada has adopted capital punishment. Inmate Daryl Kane is the first to visit the chair.

Kane, played by Bill Pats, speaks directly to the audience. He tells his story, pausing sometimes to say, "It's fun to kill somebody, isn't it?" Uncomfortable silence. People shift in their seats. And he moves on with the story.

Pats plays different characters with conviction. You'll forget the story is fictional. Executing Justice provides a poignantly human look at one man's life in all its grit. You may not like Kane, but by the end of the play you will surely understand him.

The only thing keeping this from being a five-star performance is some dropped threads. Who is the father in the Walmart parking lot? How does he fit in? Why don't the prosecutors mention a baby was killed?

Be sure to book tickets in advance. The opening show was nearly full.

The Untitled Sam Mullins Project

Sam Mullins' new show is inspired in part by his experiences in a stand-up comedy class, in which he is asked to write down four truths. He gets it wrong, but the truths stick with and inspire him. They've also inspired me. So here are four truths about The Untitled Sam Mullins Project:

Truth 1: He looks like a cross between Woody Allen and Andy Samberg. This makes me want to listen to him for days.

Truth 2: He's a first-rate storyteller and comedian whose life-mined material is both hilarious and profound.

Truth 3: He is a young man who speaks with the genuine authority of an old soul, and it makes you want to hear more.

Truth 4: The Untitled Sam Mullins Project provides a satisfying hour for anyone who likes their storytelling to have a smart dose of humour and their stand-up to have a deep vein of pathos.

KELLY STIFORA, CBC REVIEW CREW

The Surprise

Martin Dockery just found out he has half-Vietnamese twin siblings. They are 36 years younger than him. His family doesn't express emotion so he bottles up his feelings and travels to Asia to visit his new family.

Dockery is an expert storyteller with a perfect sense of timing. His long fingers dance through the air as he tells a story you won't quickly forget — because in a way this is also our story, one of disintegrating relationships and the pain and joy of family. With The Surprise, Dockery latches on to something fundamentally human. He lays himself bare, pulling the audience through laughter and tears.

Go and see this show. Period. You won't be disappointed.

Police board OKs funding for cadets on buses

From spitting to stabbing. Driver assault is all too common, says labour council president

BERNICE PONTANILLA
bernice.pontanilla@metronews.ca

Cadets will aid in the battle to make buses safer no matter who picks up the tab in the future, Winnipeg Police Chief Devon Clunis said on Tuesday.

Clunis made his comments following the police board meeting, where a discussion took place over which department would fund the positions passed this year: police or Winnipeg Transit.

The board approved the addition of the auxiliary force cadets and the police budget as the source; however, an amendment was made stating that if the funding for the two positions did not materialize, they would be discontinued.

Clunis said that while he understands the board's reasoning, he believes it's about more than financing.

"This is public safety, so at the end of the day we certainly will never jeopardize public safety simply because, maybe, finances aren't there," he said, adding that depending how this initial step goes, there could be more cadets assigned to buses in the future.

Coun. Brian Mayes and Dave Sauer, president of the Winnipeg Labour Council, both spoke passionately in favour of the cadets' inclusion of the safety measure, which includes inspectors.

Early on in the meeting, board members asked Mayes and Sauer about stats behind the assaults, and whether they warranted the inclusion of cadets.

Sauer said that many drivers don't report the assaults, which usually originate as a fare dispute.

"Some of the spitting, they'll just wipe it off and carry on," he said. "It depends on the severity, but there is quite a long list. I've seen a lot of the data.

"The variety is really quite startling: stabbings, punching, kicking, firearms pulled on operators, liquids and they also include bodily fluids in cups and cans thrown at operators."

Chief and chair ponder: Where does police board fit within civic process?

The nuts and bolts of an agreement with school divisions for the school resource officer program led to questions over the Winnipeg Police Board's jurisdiction on Tuesday.

David Sanders, a Winnipegger who often speaks at city hall meetings, raised concerns during Tuesday's special meeting. Sanders noted the police board was receiving the agreement after council already approved it on July 16.

"Right now, I can't imagine any good excuse for failing to bring these agreements to the board for approval first, at least by the time of your last regular board meeting on June 6," he said.

Police Chief Devon Clunis said the police board is still in its "infancy" and is working out what it does — and doesn't — encompass.

"You're talking about working with the city, the board, police service, understanding who has jurisdiction and it's just going to take some time and discussion, meaningful discussion, keeping our eyes fixed on the prize (which is) that we're trying to create a safe environment for the city," Clunis said after the meeting.

Coun. Scott Fielding, who chairs the board, said the provincial legislation governing the board is a "very complicated document."

At the end of the discussion, the school resource officer program was renewed until 2017 and will see police officers stationed at schools in three divisions: St. James-Assiniboia, Pembina Trails and the Winnipeg School Division.

Victims' bodies removed from plane crash site in east Ukraine

Flight 17. Bodies will be flown to the Netherlands, where the majority of victims are from, to be identified

Malaysian air crash investigators look around the crash site of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17 in the village of Rozsypne, eastern Ukraine, on Tuesday. VADIM GHIRDA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A train bearing the dead from the downed Malaysian airliner finally reached Ukrainian government-held territory Tuesday, but the pro-Russian separatists in control of the crash site showed little willingness to allow the full-scale investigation demanded by world leaders.

Five days after the plane was blown out of the sky, refrigerated railcars bearing victims' bodies — gathered up after several days in the sun — rolled out of the war zone and into the city of Kharkiv.

The dead will be flown to the Netherlands, the homeland of most of the victims, for identification. The Dutch government declared a day of national mourning Wednesday, as the country prepared for the arrival of the first bodies in the afternoon.

It was unclear how many of the 282 corpses reported found so far were on the train. The crash killed all 298 people aboard Malaysia Airlines Flight 17.

Jan Tuinder, the Dutch official in charge of the international team dealing with the dead, said that at least 200 bodies were aboard the train and that more remains could be found once the body bags are examined fully.

The flight data recorders will be examined by British air accident investigators. At the crash zone, Malaysia Airlines officials walked the site wearing backpacks, photographing the scattered debris.

Warship sale continues

France says it will go ahead with the sale of a warship to Russia despite calls for an arms embargo against the country, highlighting how Europe's business ties hinder its ability to punish Moscow over the crisis in Ukraine.

- French President Francois Hollande said that if the deal were cancelled, they would have to reimburse Russia 1.1 billion euros.

Conspiracy theories

Russian media speculation paints Ukraine as crash culprit

An assassination attempt against Russian President Vladimir Putin; a desperate ploy to draw the West into the battle for Ukraine's east; a botched mission to commit mass murder against Russian citizens: Russian news consumers are getting plenty of explanations for the downing of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17, which killed 298 people.

Yekaterina Andreyeva, one of Russia's most famous TV anchors, delved into one theory hours after news of the crash broke: Putin, travelling home from Brazil, passed along the same flight path as the Malaysian passenger jet less than one hour before it was hit, suggesting an assassination attempt.

By Friday morning, the assassination theory was replaced by other scenarios.

Liquefied natural gas: The answer?

British Columbia. Christy Clark claims LNG industry will help clean up the Earth, as well as B.C.'s debt

British Columbia's Premier, Christy Clark, says B.C.'s proposed liquefied natural gas industry has the power to fight air pollution in China and clear up smog in Los Angeles.

The premier's natural gas development minister also boasted to delegates at the same conference on Monday that the LNG industry will clean up the provincial debt.

Clark told the Pacific Northwest Economic Region gathering, where business and government leaders from provinces, territories and U.S. states gathered to address policy issues, that LNG will fight harmful greenhouse gas emissions worldwide, but it may also increase those same emissions in B.C.

"This is our biggest opportunity we've ever had to reduce greenhouse gas emissions worldwide," Clark told a crowd in Whistler, B.C. "Studies have shown cleaner air in China means cleaner air here. Cleaner air in China means fewer smog days in Los Angeles."

She said China plans to reduce its energy dependency on coal and is looking to increase its use of natural gas by four per cent, which is not a large number, but is equivalent to all the greenhouse gas emissions in B.C. for a period of 18 months.

The premier said the Liberal government is banking on at least three LNG export plants operating in B.C. by 2020. The major export markets for B.C. LNG are China, South Korea and Japan.

Husi Food Co. Expired meat scandal spreads to Burger King, Starbucks in China

A reported meat scandal in China engulfed Starbucks and Burger King on Tuesday and spread to Japan, where McDonald's said the Chinese supplier accused of selling expired beef and chicken had provided 20 per cent of the meat for its chicken nuggets.

Chinese authorities expanded their investigation of the meat supplier, Shanghai company Husi Food Co. A day after Husi's food processing plant in Shanghai was sealed by the China Food and Drug Administration, the agency said Tuesday that inspectors also will look at its facilities and meat sources in five provinces in central, eastern and southern China.

WORSHIPPING THE GREAT WHITE

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Jaws is back.

But instead of mass hysteria, the great white shark is spawning retail frenzy along the banks of old Cape Cod.

Shark sightings have increased in recent years along with the increase in shark bait: Big, tasty (if you're a shark) grey seals.

But instead of freaking out, people are flocking to the area to spot a shark and attack the racks, where they can buy great-white inspired T-shirts, hoodies, hats and cute little stuffed sharks.

People love sharks, and they love great whites most of all.

The 1975 movie, Steven Spielberg's first blockbuster, has earned about US$2 billion, adjusted for inflation, and its ominous doo-doo-doo-doo music continues to resonate up and down our spine.

The success of Jaws led to a sequel and perhaps the greatest movie tagline in history: Just when you thought it was safe to go back in the water.

It also led to the summer blockbuster: The bloated multi-million dollar overabundance of special effects and bad acting that has spawned a creature even scarier than a shark: Michael Bay, the director of the Transformer movies.

Just when you thought it was safe to go back in the theatre.

Hysteria aside, there have been 106 unprovoked great white shark attacks in U.S. waters, 13 of them fatal, since 1916.

You're as likely to be attacked by a grey seal.

Still, unlike the pleasingly plump and (usually) indolent seal, the great white has a powerful grip on our imaginations — as you might expect from a creature that can grow up to seven metres long, swim 65 kilometres per hour and bite with the force of 4,000 foot pounds, whatever that means.

Shark scientists believe most great white attacks on people are of the experimental variety, or test bites.

"It kind of looks like a seal, so I'll just give 'er a nibble."

There is learned speculation that great whites don't even like the taste of humans, which is probably cold consolation for those swimmers down one leg on account of a test bite.

I can testify that when someone on a paddle board comes screaming by, shouting:

"Shark! Shark in the water!" you don't spend any time wondering about the myth versus the hype.

You just get the hell out of the water as fast as you can.

Four-thousand pounds of force, indeed,

One good thing about all this great white shark worship: There could be as few as 3,500 great whites left in all the world's oceans after decades of over-fishing, mostly for shark fin soup.

Although it's probably too little too late, a little respect from its foremost predator is exactly what the great white shark needs.

Kayakers having a whale of a time

ANDREW FIFIELD
andrew.fifield@metronews.ca

Listen... "whales are huge" is an absurdly obvious thing to say. The word "whale" itself is a synonym for things that are particularly gargantuan.

Heck, the blue whale is the largest animal to ever call our planet home. The evidence is in. It's settled. Whales are huge.

But then you see something like this jowl-jellying encounter between some Argentine kayakers and a few visiting whales, and what's left to say about an animal that resembles a small island emerging from an undersea eruption? (Gisela6652/YouTube)

Woman enough to kick butt as all-out action stars

Pam Grier walks into a bar. Sounds like the beginning of a joke, but it's actually the setup for one of the great fight scenes of the 1970s.

Grier played the title character in 1974's Foxy Brown, a woman who poses as a high-end escort to get revenge on the gangsters who killed her G-Man boyfriend. When her undercover work brings her to a seedy bar, she confronts Bobbie, a tough-talking patron (played by Jeannie Epper who was also Lynda Carter's stunt double on Wonder Woman).

"Listen, skinny," says Bobbie, "before you start talking tough, I better warn you. I got a black belt in karate. So why don't you get out of here quietly, while you still have some teeth left in that ugly face?"

Before you can say, "You go, girl," Foxy clobbers Bobbie with a wooden stool, slamming her in the face then shattering it across her back.

"And I got my black belt in bar stools!" says Foxy.

Grier could deliver a line and a punch, attributes that allowed her to cut a swathe in the male-dominated action movie market of the 1970s.

This weekend Scarlett Johansson adds to Grier's kick-butt legacy on the big screen with Lucy, an all-out actioner about a woman who becomes a superhuman when a drug allows her to use 100 per cent of her brain capacity. "I'm able to do things I've never done before," she says. "I feel everything and can control the elements around me."

Johansson joins a list of dangerous distaff action stars like Michelle Yeoh (Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon), Jenette Goldstein (Aliens), Angelina Jolie (Wanted, Salt, Mr. & Mrs. Smith, Lara Croft: Tomb Raider) and Uma Thurman (Kill Bill, Parts 1 & 2) who have given Schwarzenegger and Stallone a run for their money.

Perhaps the wildest female action movie of all time is 1965's "ode to female violence," Faster, Pussycat! Kill! Kill! starring Tura Satana as the thrill-seeking go-go dancer Varla.

Experienced in martial arts, Satana did her own stunts and brought her unique style — black leather gloves, Germaine Monteil eyeliner and layers of Max Factor pancake makeup — to the film.

She even supplied some of the movie's most memorable lines.

When a gas station attendant ogles her cleavage while extolling the virtues of being on the open road and seeing America, Satana ad libbed, "You won't find it down there, Columbus!"

Time critic Richard Corliss called Satana's performance "the most honest, maybe the one honest portrayal in the [director Russ] Meyer canon and certainly the scariest."

"I took a lot of my anger that had been stored inside of me for many years and let it loose," Satana said of her most famous role.

"I helped to create the character Varla and helped to make her someone that many women would love to be like."

The Imitation Game. Cumberbatch plays code-breaking math genius

The trailer for a new biopic about Alan Turing, directed by Morten Tyldum (Headhunters) has been released, featuring Benedict Cumberbatch as the brilliant mathematician, whose exceptional intelligence was not always an advantage.

The Imitation Game tells the story of Turing, the British mathematician and cryptanalyst who is widely considered to be the founder of computer science. Benedict Cumberbatch (Sherlock, 12 Years a Slave) plays the title character, joined by Keira Knightley and Matthew Goode.

The biopic focuses primarily on the war years, during which Turing worked at the British government's code-breaking centre during the Second World War. His innovative solution for deciphering the Nazis' Enigma code laid the groundwork for his development of computer science in the years after the war.

The Imitation Game will arrive in theatres in the U.S. on Nov. 21. AFP

The pine, which had grown to 10 feet by last year, has been felled by ... beetles. Los Angeles city councilman Tom LaBonge tells the L.A. Come play with the Little Prince

New theme park. A park in the east of France celebrates life's small pleasures couched in the theme of a beloved character

Tucked into a corner of eastern France where overseas tourists rarely venture, the Park of the Little Prince takes its name from one of French literature's most beloved characters — and takes its cues from a simpler time when roller coasters didn't set out to terrify, living room televisions didn't have multi-player 3D video games and theme parks were scaled for the small.

The park, which opened July 1, is perfect for visitors looking for a way to entertain small children who might have had their fill of road-tripping through the French, German or Swiss countryside.

It's located in Ungersheim, in the heart of the Alsace region, about 50 kilometres (30 miles) from Basel, Switzerland, and about 15 kilometres (10 miles) from the German border.

There are 31 attractions based loosely on the theme of flight.

The Little Prince is a space explorer and author Antoine de Saint-Exupery was a well-known pilot. He got his pilot's license in Strasbourg, the regional capital of Alsace.

Attractions include two tethered passenger balloons, a film about deep-sea mysteries watched from the perspective of a water scooter, and visits with real fox cubs or a flock of sheep with their sheepdog.

Despite the smattering of high-tech, the park — like the book, which was published in 1943 — is more about slowing down and taking stock of the small things that delight.

And remember, as the Little Prince said, "children should always show great forbearance toward grown-up people."

Try telling that to your excited kids as you walk through an amusement park's gates.

Avoiding a face-to-face faux pas

Success in the sit-down. Ace any interview by burying a few common blunders

LAUREN MARINIGH
Metro World News

Don't be afraid to ask for clarification with questions you're unsure of. The overall goal is to provide relevant answers to each question.
ISTOCK

In a competitive job market, it can be pretty hard to land an interview.

When you manage to get one, it's important to make the most of the opportunity.

Here are some common mistakes that may be stopping you from interview success, whether that means getting hired or progressing to the next stage of the hiring process.

Abandon these bad habits and your interviews will have a much higher chance of a positive outcome.

Behaving unprofessionally

Regardless of your chosen industry, previous experience or the nature of the position at hand, professional conduct is absolutely vital.

Dress to impress at every interview you attend, even if it's a casual work environment. Overdressing is better than underdressing. Avoid wearing sandals, short skirts, T-shirts, jeans or shorts.

Map out your route in advance, and be sure you have an alternate plan if there are any issues en route. If you're travelling to an unfamiliar area, you may want to test out your route beforehand.

Time how long it will take to get to your interview, and allocate extra time for traffic. Make sure you arrive on time — which means arriving early.

Aim to be at the interview site 15 to 30 minutes ahead of time. Arriving too early can catch an interviewer off-guard, so be prepared to spend some time at a nearby coffee shop or other venue until it's appropriate for you to show up.

Once you arrive to your interview, turn off your phone. If a phone goes off in the interview, you might as well get up and leave.

Tip: You are under scrutiny from the moment you enter the interview location. Assume a confident, professional bearing in advance of your arrival.

Winging it

You read the job description and decided that you're a perfect fit for the role — but landing the interview doesn't mean anything is for sure.

A lack of preparation will make it harder for you to shine in an interview, particularly if you're unable to answer simple questions about the company's operations.

Remember, an interview is not just about your skills and experience. Capable interviewers will also be looking to assess your personal and professional fit. Make sure to read about the business. Note things like their mission, CEO's name, values, and services.

Have a good understanding of the actual position you are interviewing for. Can you identify the major skills and experience that would make someone an asset for the role?

Don't forget to study your own resumé.

Having a detailed knowledge of the company is just part of the picture — making compelling connections between the role and your own skills is vital for success.

Tip: Research sample interview questions online. Choose several at random. Could you compose a competent answer on the spot?

TALENTEGG.CA IS CANADA'S LEADING JOB SITE AND ONLINE CAREER RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY STUDENTS AND RECENT GRADUATES.

Oversharing

Some organizations do interviews in a very laid-back fashion, and work hard to make the whole process feel like a casual chat.

- It's important to take your cues from the interviewer, but don't forget the purpose of your meeting. Personal topics aren't relevant, so don't bring them up first.
- Take care to monitor how engaged the interviewer and other participants are. If they're talking at length about great takeout places near the office, be sure to engage and share your enthusiasm — but if you find yourself doing most of the talking, you've probably overstepped.
- Only discuss your past experiences in terms of what they taught you and how they position you for the job at hand. Don't focus on negatives or unproductive periods of your employment history.
- Tip: Be ready for questions about negative workplace experiences or times when you haven't met expectations. Make sure you know how to turn these into positive anecdotes.

Burger Condiment. Chickpea Hummus

This recipe makes about two cups (500 ml). EMILY RICHARDS

This hummus is great to dip into with raw veggies or is a great addition to top off hamburgers or sandwiches.

You could also enjoy it on its own in half a whole wheat pita with tomatoes and cucumber slices.

Try variations for different flavours.

1. In food processor, pulse together chickpeas, peppers, tahini and cumin. With food processor running, add oil and water until very smooth. Pulse in lemon juice and garlic. EMILY RICHARDS

Ingredients

- 1 can (19 oz/540 ml) chickpeas, drained and rinsed
- 1/2 cup (125 ml) chopped roasted red peppers or 1 red pepper, roasted, peeled and seeded
- 1/4 cup (50 ml) tahini
- 1/2 tsp (2 ml) ground cumin
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) water
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) lemon juice
- 1 small clove garlic, minced

Variation

Go beyond chickpeas.

- Sun-dried tomato version. Omit roasted red peppers. Use 1/4 cup (60 ml) chopped sun-dried tomatoes rehydrated in hot water and drained.

Ingredients

- 1 small onion, grated
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) horseradish
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) steak sauce
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) Dijon mustard
- 2 tsp (10 ml) Worcestershire sauce
- 2 tsp (10 ml) dried oregano
- 1/2 tsp (2 ml) freshly ground black pepper
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) each natural bran and wheat germ
- 1 lb (500g) lean ground beef
- 2 1/2 whole wheat buns
- 4 leaves lettuce
- 1 tomato, sliced

This recipe makes five servings. EMILY RICHARDS

Beef and horseradish are a perfect combination, making this burger a hit with meat lovers. For a spicier horseradish flavour, simply smother the top with some more horseradish.

1. In large bowl, stir together onion, garlic, horseradish, steak sauce, mustard, Worcestershire, oregano and pepper. Add bran and wheat germ, stir to coat. Let stand 5 minutes. Using slightly damp hands, mix in beef until mixture is well combined.

2. Form meat mixture into 5 patties that are about 1/2-inch (1 cm) thick. Place on greased grill or in nonstick skillet for about 12 minutes, turning once or until no longer pink inside. Place patties on each half of buns. Top with lettuce and tomato slices.

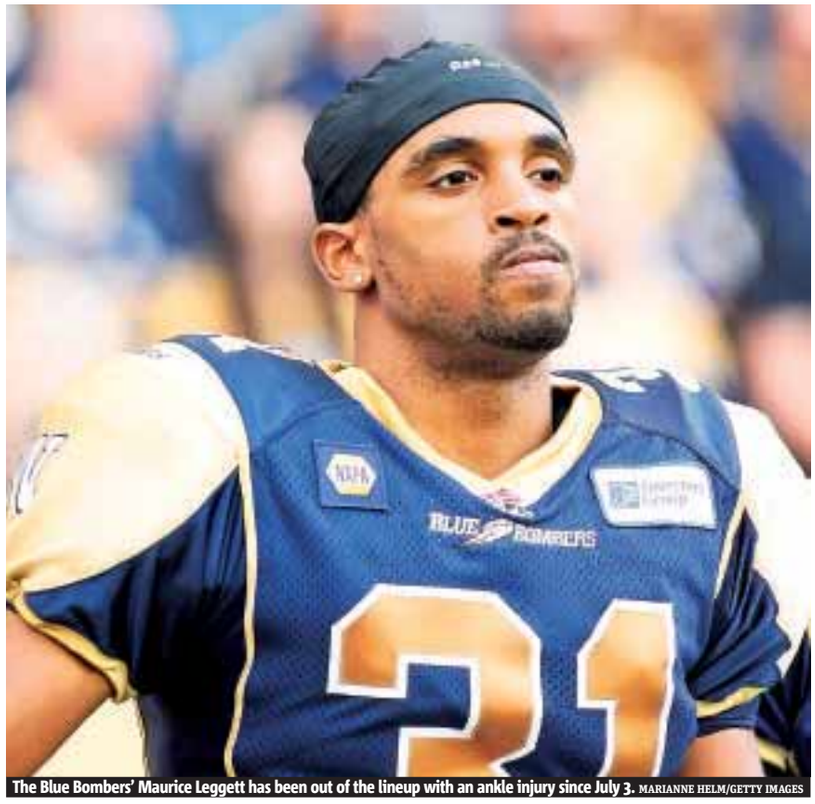
Leggett eyes return at the Lions' den

CFL. Healed defensive back could rejoin Blue Bombers' defence on road in Vancouver



The Blue Bombers' Maurice Leggett has been out of the lineup with an ankle injury since July 3. MARIANNE HELM/GETTY IMAGES

Maurice Leggett may be a CFL rookie, but he's been around pro football since 2008.

That's long enough to have played in a lot of different schemes, and he says he likes the feel of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers' new-look defence.

"It's fun to me, it's like 'Hey, look what I can do now,'" the member of Winnipeg's secondary said after practice Tuesday.

"It's a fun defence. The best way to play is having fun."

The bible according to defensive co-ordinator Gary Etcheverry is, "Know what your neighbour does and be prepared to do it yourself," whenever and wherever necessary.

"I have to learn the entire defence just in case something happens, or I have to direct someone that doesn't know what to do as well as I know the defence," said Leggett, who could be returning to the lineup in Vancouver Friday, after being out with an ankle injury since July 3.

He's healthy again at the right time, with a question mark hanging over an injured Johnny Sears for Friday's tilt against the surging B.C. Lions.

"He seems like a pretty smart football player," said head coach Mike O'Shea.

"He's smooth, smooth, smooth out there. He's competitive. He can do a bunch of different things. We were pretty happy with Moe Leggett from the get-go so it's not a stretch to see him in there."

O'Shea says his versatility is exactly what the Bombers want.

"These guys got to know the goal is, by some point during the season, they know everything about every position," O'Shea said. "That's how they meet, that's how they talk." THE CANADIAN PRESS

His resumé

Maurice Leggett came to the Blue Bombers from the Arena Football League, after stints with Kansas City and Detroit in the NFL.

Will Ford

Riders sign former Bombers all-star

The Saskatchewan Roughriders added running back Will Ford to their practice roster Tuesday.

The five-foot-11, 195-pound Ford spent the last two seasons with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers. Ford was an East Division all-star in 2013 after rushing for 594 yards and two touchdowns while adding seven catches for 41 yards in 13 regular-season games.

Ford was released by the Bombers earlier this season without appearing in a game.

Goldeyes

Fish double down on RedHawks

The Winnipeg Goldeyes swept a doubleheader against the Fargo-Moorhead RedHawks, claiming 7-2 and 4-3 wins on Monday.

The Goldeyes improved their record to 41-23.

In something more reminiscent of the environment at a Winnipeg Jets game, the 5,878 Fish faithful booed and berated RedHawks second baseman C.J. Retherford throughout the second game, after he collided hard with Winnipeg catcher Luis Alen on a play at the plate. Retherford plowed the veteran backstop into the dirt, scoring in the process.

Alen, no worse for wear, singled in his next at-bat.

The two clubs finish their three-game series Wednesday night at 7 p.m.

Sam eager for next phase with Rams

Now it starts to get intense for Michael Sam and the rest of the St. Louis Rams' rookies.

The first openly gay player drafted in the NFL is enthusiastic about the challenge. Twice on Tuesday, he mentioned how enjoyable it was being back on the field and trading wisecracks with teammates.

"I'm so excited to be back with the guys," Sam said. "Football's fun."

Sam hopes there will be less attention about his sexual orientation, but added his focus has to be on making the team. He said he's in the best shape of his life, dropping 13 pounds in the month since the last OTA workout, weighing in at 257 pounds.

"Feeling great," he said. "It's just where I want to be speed-wise, so I can run fast and make plays. I want to be as fast as I can."

He didn't have much to say about his experience at the ESPYS, where he received the Arthur Ashe Courage award and got a hug from Hall of Famer Jim Brown on his way to the stage.

Just as they did after the draft and during OTAs, teammates didn't seem to care that Sam was gay. Offensive lineman Demetrius Rhaney had only compliments.

"He's a football player, he's not a bother," Rhaney said. "He's laid-back, funny, jokes a lot. Pretty good."

Nash backs Canadian hoopsters' toughness

Basketball. Two-time NBA MVP pans critic's suggestion that players from the North are soft

Steve Nash had a good chuckle at ESPN personality Jason Whitlock's suggestion that Canadians in the NBA are not as motivated to succeed as their American counterparts.

"Andrew Wiggins is from Canada," Whitlock said on Keith Olbermann's ESPN show Monday night. "And Canadian athletes, I think, among NBA players and NBA people, perhaps don't want it as much as even some of the Europeans, and certainly the American players."

Nash, a two-time NBA MVP and the general manager of Canada's senior men's squad, was in town for a three-day camp before the team departed for a European exhibition series. He responded to Whitlock's comments after the team's final practice.

Andrew Wiggins dunks against the Bucks during a summer league game. JOHN LOCHER/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"It's a wonderful sweeping generalization, really good. Hit it on the head there," Nash said.

The 40-year-old, who broke into the league during the 1996-97 season with the Phoenix Suns, admitted he had to overcome knocks in his game as a young player making a name for himself. He said Wiggins will have to learn to silence his critics, too.

"I had to prove that I was athletic enough to play in the NBA," said the Los Angeles Lakers point guard. "His athleticism isn't a question, they're worrying about his motivation and desire.

"He'll overcome it. He'll take that criticism, like he always has over the last four or five years, and overcome it. There's times where we'd always like to see him show a little more alpha male, but when the game's on the line, I never see him turn away slights as motivation and he'll overcome it."

2014 Chevy Silverado

- Type. Two- or four-door, 4x2 or 4x4 full-size pickup
- Engines (hp). 4.3-litre V6 (285/305), 5.3-litre V8 (355/383), 6.2-litre V8 (420/460)
- Transmission. Six-speed automatic
- Base price. $26,540 (plus destination)

Market position

The Chevrolet Silverado comes in three cab configurations (Regular, Double and Crew) and in a range of trim lines to suit various needs and budgets. As with Ford and Ram, heavy-duty models are also available.

Points

- This is the first year for the High Country, a top-line luxury trim model that roughly corresponds to GMC's Sierra Denali.
- A new bumper step and corresponding hand-hold is a simple but effective method of accessing the truck bed.
- Changes include new styling, projector headlamps, more differentiation between the trims, and a new available 6-foot-6 bed on the Crew Cab.

The Silverado has a bumper step to ease access to the truck bed.

Interesting features

An available MyLink infotainment system, high-wear cloth upholstery, forward-collision and lane-departure warning with vibrating seat alert, park assist, and power sunroof.

Review. The improved Chevy Silverado and GMC Sierra pickups narrow the gap with their competitors

drive@metronews.ca

There are few auto segments more fiercely fought than the pickup truck market, and few as diverse. Buyers range from those who tow massive campers and horse trailers to those who drive them primarily as big cars.

Because of this, automakers are updating their trucks far more frequently than they did in the past.

General Motors has introduced an all-new Chevrolet Silverado for 2014, along with its mechanically identical GMC Sierra twin. This truck had been lagging behind some of its competitors for a while, but it's now firmly back in the game.

The three available engines are the same size as on the last-generation model — a 4.3-litre V6, a 5.3-litre V8 and a 6.2-litre V8 — but they're entirely new, and they come with fuel-saving technologies.

One of them is cylinder deactivation, which seamlessly shuts the engine down to four cylinders when full power isn't needed. That's becoming relatively common on V8s, but it's rare to see it on a V6, as here.

On the Double Cab, the rear doors are now hinged at the front instead of the back, making it simple to get into the rear seats. On all models, the doors are now flush with the body, rather than extended into the roof, which helps reduce noise. Overall, this is probably the quietest truck cabin on the market, and the redesigned interior is both handsome and functional.

A lower hip point on the seat makes it easier to get into this big truck. The new suspension and electric power steering have been tuned for responsive handling and a smooth ride, and it's a good driver.

It also tows well, although competitive trucks produce more torque than Chevrolet, with engines comparable to the Silverado's 5.3-litre V8.

Chevy hasn't leapfrogged over the competition with this truck, but the considerable improvements warrant serious consideration for those in the market.

Horoscopes by Sally Brompton

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
If you listen to what others say you will likely learn something to your advantage today. The Sun in Leo means there are opportunities coming your way.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
If the stresses of life are getting to you, take an hour out of your schedule and sit somewhere quiet where you can refresh both your body and mind.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
There is no point worrying about how you are going to make ends meet. You know from experience that something always comes up.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Look ahead to where you would like to be a month or even a year from now and start doing the things that can make it happen. The more you focus on the goals, the more likely they are to come about.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
The most important thing now is that you keep reminding yourself that all things are possible. You alone create the path you take through life and you alone are responsible for it.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You may have a brilliant idea but don't do anything with it yet. Let it simmer for a while. When you come back to it later, it will have matured.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Life is meant to be enjoyed and that is exactly what you will be doing over the next few days. Others will be attracted by your positive vibes.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
If you pay attention to what a friend tells you today, you will learn something to your advantage. At the very least you will avoid making the same kind of mistake.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
The only danger now is that with so many marvelous things going on you could let down your guard and let others make decisions that are profitable for them but costly for you.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You're entitled to your opinion and to be heard but if you think everyone is going to agree with you chances are that you will be very disappointed.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Be nice to those you meet and do business with today. You are going to need their help over the next few weeks. Kind words will go a long way towards winning over important people.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If someone says something hurtful about you today don't take it too seriously. Most likely they are just having a bad day and need to let off steam.
